Graduate Student Internship Program

The Center for the Applied Study of Economics & Environment (CASE&E) is launching a paid summer internship program that will match economics graduate students with non-governmental organizations that work on environmental issues. The first internships will be awarded for summer 2006. The ideal candidate will have an MA in economics, or have completed most of their coursework towards the Ph.D. in economics.

The Center for the Applied Study of Economics & Environment (CASE&E) is a network of economists who are developing and applying economic analysis to support the protection of human well-being and the natural environment. We believe:

- A clean and safe environment is a birthright of every person. It is not a commodity to be distributed on the basis of purchasing power, nor a privilege to be distributed on the basis of political power.
- Safeguarding the natural environment is inseparable from promoting social justice. Without a fair distribution of wealth and power, neither the free market nor government regulation will guarantee environmental quality and human well-being.
- Today's environmental challenges demand new thinking. By engaging with real-world problems economists can help craft effective solutions and build a more just and sustainable future.

This internship program is part of CASE&E's effort to develop a new network of economists who are developing and applying the economic arguments for active protection of human health and the natural environment.

We invite graduate students in economics who are interested in being placed in a paid internship to contact us by sending a letter with the following information:

1. Curriculum vita
2. One letter of reference
3. A two-page statement of your research interests and how they may relate to CASE&E's mission.

Applications received before April 3 will receive highest priority. Please send application via email and hard copy to:
